Industrial Head Relates Classes To Space Age

"This billion dollar semi-conductor industry is the most highly competitive and one of the most essential in the production of United States space satellites," W. E. Medcalf told chemistry and physics classes May 12.

The research metallurgist is director of Eagle Picher's semi-conductor division at Miami, Oklahoma. He said that semi-conductors are rather unique because they are able to pass electric current when they are heated. Metallic conductors become less efficient at high temperatures where such elements as silicon, boron, and germanium are at their best.

"Consequently, these substances," he stated, "find extensive use in solar batteries, transistors, thermistors and photo cells." The metallurgist said that the government is spending billions on semi-conductor research.

"The growth of various crystals requires the combined efforts of metallurgists, electrical and electronic engineers, and chemists. There are many secrets for purifying and growing them."

The speaker explained that the growth of semi-conductor crystals requires special apparatus such as an oven able to withstand 1500 pounds per square inch and 1400 degrees centigrade temperature. The equipment takes years to develop.

When Medcalf was with the Joplin branch of Eagle Picher a few years ago, both of his daughters attended Joplin Junior College.

Phi Theta Kappa Delegate Flies To San Antonio for Convention

Eta Chi's Standlee Steenrod, along with 405 other students representing 49 colleges in the United States, recently attended the annual convention of Phi Theta Kappa held in the Hilton Hotel in San Antonio, Texas. The freshman said that Dr. Wayland P. Moody, president of San Antonio Junior College, gave the welcoming address.

Of the workshops attended, Standlee thought the one pertaining to the study and evaluation of the local chapter most interesting. The member of the scholastic fraternity was receptive to ideas on how to better public relations, how to serve the community, and

Exchange Club Creates Irwin Memorial Fund

Joplin's Exchange Club this month established an "Irwin Memorial Fund" in honor of the late Arnold Irwin, professor of political science for 13 years at Joplin Junior College.

Available to Joplin Junior students, the fund providing non-interest-bearing loans as financial help to deserving students will be administered by the Dean of the College and the President of the Exchange Club. Students who have previously attended the College will receive priority, but new entrants may also obtain financial assistance.

Dean Maurice Litton stresses the flexibility of the fund. He says that the student's needs will determine the amount of the loan which may run for a reasonable length of time according to individual circumstances.

Metallurgist Lectures On Missile Batteries

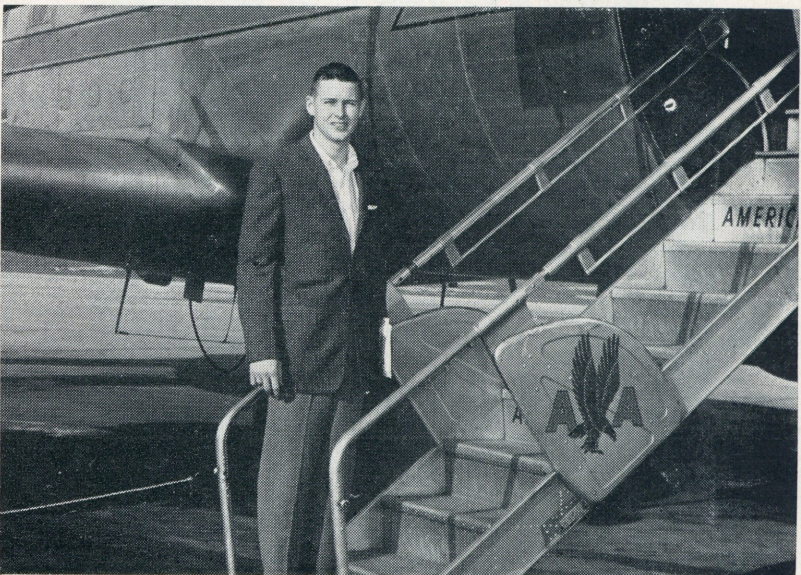

Don Doan, one of Eagle Picher's top research metallurgists, lectured yesterday on special purpose batteries to Miss Eula Ratekin's chemistry classes. He showed by illustration and explanation the chemical composition of the various types of power supplies which find extensive use in missiles and space vehicles.

A novel Russian thermo-electric battery used in Siberia and other areas where electrical power is a problem was as amusing as it was interesting.

how to be active in other school functions.

Standlee reported that a speech by Dr. John Ed Williams, Wake Forest psychology professor, on the need for young people to seek higher and continuous self education left much food for thought. Dr. Williams stressed the fact that now is the time to set a study goal that will insure a bright future.

Standlee stated that all these events along with the Fiesta Flambeau and an informal dance helped to make his trip most interesting and rewarding for both Eta Chi Chapter and himself.

A Taste of Culture:

In the Artist's Way

"Modern art is like modern youth in that it is always growing and often unpredictable," says Arthur Boles, art instructor of Joplin Junior College. This active instructor, who has taught at the College for 22 years, promotes art as an instrument of expression. He believes that a student should be "creative in his own way."

For decorative purposes and points of interest in the College, the instructor supplies the display windows with various art compositions by students and renowned artists. He has also made a fine contribution to the school and students by establishing an Art Exhibit Room on the third floor this spring. Class compositions of modern and realistic art, papier-mache pre-historic animals, and William Blake's creations of Job have already been exhibited in Room 308. Many more will be displayed.

It is important that all of us think of art as a living and continuing force whether it be realistic or modern. Thus, with the contributions of Arthur Boles and others in the field, art shall live and produce even greater heights of creativeness.

Musical Notes

One student graduation recital was held and another was cancelled during the past month. Dennis Spille, baritone, presented his recital on May 8, assisted by pianist Lorraine Barnes. Bill Thomson was forced to cancel his recital for May 15 due to an infected hand.

Music students and other music lovers enjoyed playing some of the old instruments shown by the Baroque Ensemble of the University of Arkansas in their concert here. The old instruments included an oboe, recorder, wood flute, and a harpsichord.

The Triple Trio scored a big hit in their appearance at the Alumni Banquet. Following the Indian theme, their selections included two Omaha tribal songs and "Ten Little Indians."

We Enjoyed

'Meet Mr. Eisenhower'

"Meet Mr. Eisenhower" presents a personal glimpse of the President and some of the incidents which occurred right before and during his first term in office as witnessed by A. Merriman Smith, a senior White House reporter. In writing the book, the author simply states these personal facts about Mr. Eisenhower with no mention of his political beliefs. Thus the book offends no one, regardless of political party affiliations.

Smith dwells upon the President's taut manner of conducting his office as well as himself, emphasizing his strong antipathy for sloppiness.

The section pertaining to Mr. Eisenhower's outdoor cooking is surprising, as it is difficult to think of the President in an apron, or as the maker of recipes. Other sections on relaxation picture him playing bridge or golf with friends from the armed services and the business world.

Written in an informal style, this readable book amuses and entertains. It adequately gives an interesting introduction to a man of world renown.

—Mary Sue Calvin

'What A Morning'

Marian Anderson's "My Lord, What A Morning" presents a charming and inspiring autobiography of her life from childhood in Philadelphia to adulthood in the great concert halls of the world. This appealing book reveals the character of a remarkable woman guided by deep spiritual values and a great belief in the goodness of man. Though she has experienced many brutal contacts with race prejudice, she has met each obstacle with characteristic dignity and sadness.

Miss Anderson clearly shows that she is proud of being a Negro, but more than that of being an American. Undoubtedly her most remarkable characteristic is philosophic patience toward race prejudice. Enduring this with sadness not anger, she has risen above many unfortunate situations.

In portraying the events of this moving book, Miss Anderson has written with restraint and modesty. Her humble attitude towards life shines throughout her words.

Miss Yount Attends Convention in Florida

Instructor Venus Yount attended the Seventy-Fifth Anniversary Convention in Physical Education and Health in Miami Beach, Florida, last month. She said that at each meeting the teachers heard lectures by recognized speakers, one of whom was Dr. Paul Dudley White, President Eisenhower's heart specialist.

The teachers were entertained at night by college students in spectacular circus shows. Miss Yount also reported that all the leading sports companies had their equipment displayed by professional sportsmen.

And Time to Enjoy It

Ordinarily self-improvement decisions, commonly called New Years Resolutions, are sworn to on January 1. But many years start at a time not coinciding with the calendar year. Graduating sophomores and students attending a summer school commence a new year in June. These individuals should resolve to enjoy the next session.

One way to seek happiness is to avoid overloading with any type of activity—work, education, or recreation. Students continuing their education during the next two months should remember that any inconvenience of a summer session is short. Though the thermometer rises and the swimming pool beckons, time flies quickly.

If one has chosen wisely, and has not enrolled for more classes than he can master, the rewards are worth the effort involved. The student's transcript will show a few extra hours, and he may even compile higher grades than he ordinarily would. Furthermore, lessons next winter will be easier with a lightened load.

And between lessons and work, one will still have time for those outings. Classes begun and finished early in the day leave time for work, or picnics and swimming parties. The year is successful. There is time to enjoy it.

Schlupp Shares Recipe For Getting to Sleep

In this certain recipe you add all ingredients to a clean bedroom. For a perfect sleep, one should have fresh clean bedclothes, such as one pair of pajamas, two bed sheets, one pillow (soft but firm), one window (one-fourth raised), and three good deep breaths of fresh air. Combine all ingredients together. Mix well and let stand five to six minutes. Spread out well and let mixture sleep for eight to ten hours. Remove from bed. Serves one person.
